We are always interested in helping each of our students to be ready for the world after his or her time at Philo High School. Our community is not as diverse as communities that our graduates may find themselves in when they leave us. We want our students to be prepared for diversity and realize that the differences they encounter can be uplifting and positive. The beauty of a delicious stew is how the many different ingredients combine together to create one wonderful taste.

On November 30th, Jim Stillpepper from Allwell Behavioral Health Services met with 30 of our Electric Leaders to formulate a plan to help Philo High School students promote and accept diversity. The Electric Leaders are student representatives from each grade level who have demonstrated the skills and willingness to be leaders.

The Electric Leaders were given the task of developing strategies to promote the acceptance of diversity. With the guidance of Mr. Stillpepper the students brainstormed an extensive list of ideas. The students then discussed each idea and cut the list down to the ideas that best promote acceptance of diversity. The students then individually chose which idea they were most interested in developing. A committee of students for each of the selected ideas was established.

Each committee is now working on putting the ideas into action. Be on the lookout for some really cool student-developed activities at Philo High School in the future that will help our students understand the importance of accepting differences of others.

Go Electrics!
